WELLNESS TIP OF THE WEEK

Many food companies use sketchy tactics to trick the public into buying and consuming their unhealthy products. They will include bold phrases like "Cholesterol-Free" to make you think these won't add to an already unhealthy cholesterol level. In order to make these products, they will often use trans fats which naturally have no cholesterol but can actually be detrimental to your cholesterol levels. Research shows that artificially made trans fats such as partially hydrogenated vegetable oils can increase your LDL cholesterol levels and should be avoided as much as possible. It is probably best to shop around the produce aisle where foods don't require much labeling or packaging as they exist in their most naturally occurring state.
